

Hello,

Just like in Japan, we had a spring break this month. I participated in a kind of career education, called 'fire camp'. In the event, around fifteen students from different schools stay in the fire department together and learn things about fire for the first week of the spring break.

It was a good experience for me because I haven't had such an opportunity to work together with Canadian or other international friends. We were divided into four groups of three and worked together. Teamwork is really important in the fire fighter's job because they need to rescue people or put out the fire quickly. We communicated a lot in the team, and I improved my English skills. Also, it was nice to experience some jobs of Canadian fire fighters. We did many kinds of things such as ladder rescue, rope rescue, rescue from smoking building and put out fire from cars. I learned things I had never experienced. This camp was the biggest event in my spring break. I also enjoyed the rest of the break, too.

In Japan, I'll go up to the next grade soon. I'll try to study harder during the rest of my stay in Canada, and I want to improve myself more before I go back to Japan.
