

Hello. Today I would like to introduce my school life in the U.S. There are a lot of differences in Japanese life and American one. I feel glad if you will be interested in my U.S. life. My weekdays start early. I wake up at 6:00 am and eat breakfast. I usually eat cereal and fruits in the morning. School Bus comes at 6:50 am and I arrive at school at 7:20 am.

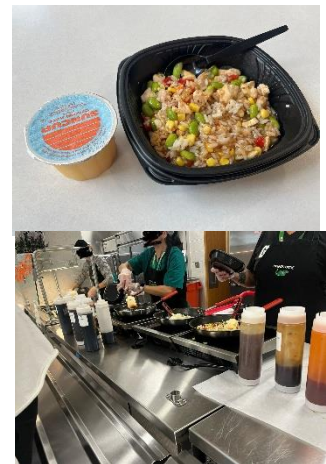

My first class is drawing class, and it starts at 7:30 am. In this class, I practice rough sketching. In American drawing class, we practice a lot of basic skills of drawing. In addition, in my school, each class is 99 minutes, and I must take the same classes every day. So, I think my drawing skills is improving.

My second class is zoology. I have taken this class because I am interested in animals. This class is similar with Japanese biology class. However, In zoology class, we can learn more specific information about animals than Japanese biology class. I tried autopsy of squid and earthworm. It was very interesting experience for me.

My third class is algebra. Before I came to U.S., my friend said, "American math is very easy for Japanese". It is true. I have taken the most difficult algebra class. However, the lessons are all things I learned when I was in middle school.

Between algebra class, I eat lunch. There is a cafeteria in my school. So, I can choose a lot of variety of food every day. For example, pizza, bagel, hotdog, fried rice, Asian chicken, and so on. My recommendation is fried rice. I can choose ingredients and sauce. The staff makes an original fried rice. It's very delicious.

My final class is English. This class is the most difficult class I take. In this class, I study different stories almost every day. So, I cannot prepare. However, stories are interesting. I will introduce my favorite story's "lamb". This story is about a wife and a husband. One day, the wife knew that her husband is cheating. So, she murdered him with frozen lamb. After that, she called a police officer, cooked the dinner with the murder weapon, and the police officer ate that... This story sounds interesting, doesn't it?

After English class, I go back to house. What do you think about my American life? There are a lot of difficult things, but every day is fun. If you were interested in studying abroad, you should try it. It will be a good experience for you.
