

Hi guys. March is already passed, and I wonder Japan is getting warmer like spring. However, there is still tons of snow in Sudbury. I had March Break between 14th to 22nd. But I got big snowstorm at the end of break. The roads couldn't be cleared, and buses were canceled for next one week. As a result, I got extra one week of March Break. It was unexpected happy event! Today, I want to talk about Big Lip and Dutch pancakes.

<Big Lip>

Big Lip is one of the big events in my school. People perform dance and act, lip syncing. We were a group of 6. Our performance was inspired by The Grease, the movie from 1978. We spent every 4th period for almost a month practicing and preparing for this event. And our performance took first place. I was low-key nervous before the performance. But I really enjoyed the entire process, and I'm very proud of my teammates.

<Dutch pancakes>

One day in March, I hung out at a friend's place recently—they have Netherlands roots-and we made Dutch pancakes together. The recipe is pretty simple, it's like mini pancake made with Takoyaki pan. While they're usually dipped in melted butter before being dusted with powdered sugar, I have my own little twist. I love dipping mine in maple syrup instead of butter! It really made me appreciate the diversity here in Canada again. Even for those born and raised here, so many people have such rich international backgrounds. It's amazing how cultures blend like that.
