

Hi guys!! I'm sure that Japan is getting warmer, but in Brisbane, it is getting colder and colder that I feel the arrival of winter every morning.

This month, there wasn't a huge event like last month, but I had a lot of fun with my friends. In the city of Brisbane, there is an artificial beach where we can swim without payments, so I went there with my friends after school!! It was around 20 degrees and swimming in the water was literally freezing, but I had a lot of fun. After swimming, we went to the night market. We saw many small shops selling piercings, clothes, game controllers, and phone cases. Everything there was so interesting for me and the light up there was so beautiful. I tried churros in a kitchen car and that was also really good that I want to eat it again someday. On the other day, I met Germany friends from Uluru trip! They live quite far away from Brisbane, but they came to hang out. I was so happy that I was able to see them again, and it was so much fun to chat with them. We talked a lot about our exchange program, and home countries. I also guided them around Brisbane city so that they would know more about Brisbane. It was so sad when I needed to say goodbye to them again, but I hope I can meet them someday before they leave for Germany.

On week 7, we had an excursion to the career expo which was held in Brisbane city. There were so many universities and companies to support teenagers for their future career. I thought this program is really nice for teenagers because some people might not know what they want to do after graduating high school, and this program will be an opportunity for them to have some ideas of their future. I looked around companies and universities, and they told me that working in Australia is hard for me since I am not a residence in Australia, but coming to study in Australia might be possible. It will be so interesting if I were able to come to Australia again to study subjects for my future.

I can't believe that I only have about 5 more months to go and I am a little bit scared if my English is not being improved. From now on, I will think of what I can do during the stay in Australia, and how I can use my time more efficiently not to regret of my decision!
