( * 印のついている単語・語句には、本文のあとに〔注〕がある。 )

Dan is visiting his aunt, Ann, and his cousins, Bee and Cal, in New York for the summer. Dan lived in the U.S. after he was born, and goes to high school in Japan. He is going back to Japan next week, and he is talking with his cousins.

Bee: After three weeks here, you're leaving next week. Are you excited?

Dan: Not really. In fact, I'd like to stay longer.

Cal: Why is that? You miss Japan, right?

Dan: I do, but I haven't finished writing a math report. <sup>(1)</sup>That makes me so nervous. I've read some books and collected information on math, but I cannot decide the topic. I've been worried about it the whole summer, and I am worried even now.

Bee: I see. Can you tell us more about your homework?

Dan: Our math teacher told us to write a math report. <sup>(2)</sup>We have to write 【 ① about ② interested ③ in ④ will ⑤ something ⑥ make ⑦ that ⑧ children 】 learning math. I cannot decide what to write in my report.

Bee: Then, why don't you ask our mom to help you?

Dan: Your mom, Ann?

Cal: Oh, that's a good idea. She is an engineer now, but taught math at a high school before she married.

Dan: I didn't know that.

Bee: She's doing something in the garden now, but I'm sure she has some time.

Bee goes to the garden and returns with Ann.

Ann: OK, Dan. Bee told me about your homework. I understand you want my help.

Dan: Right. <sup>(3)</sup>Do you have any good ideas?

Ann: Well, first, I'd like to ask you. Do you like math?

Dan: Yes. I became more interested in math after I learned that math is very useful in our life.

Ann: That's a good point. So, tell me this. Where is math necessary in daily life?

Bee: Shopping. Preparing food....

Cal: Playing music. Sports....

Dan: Understanding time, calendar....

Ann: Very good. Our world is full of math, so <sup>(4)</sup>it is very important to teach young kids the of math.

Bee: Can you tell us how?

Ann: Well, if we're interested in something, it's easier to learn. So, we have to find a way to make math more exciting for many kids.

Cal: That sounds very difficult.

Ann: Actually, there are a lot of ways to do this.

Dan: Could you tell me more?

Ann: OK. I think that doing math *puzzles is a good start.

Cal: What are those? I don't like math, so even puzzles sound boring.

Ann: That's too bad, but believe me. Have you ever heard of the “*magic square?”

|   |   |   |
|---|---|---|
| x | 1 | 6 |
| 3 | y | 7 |
| 4 | z | 2 |

Dan: No, never.

Ann: OK. I will explain it. Look at this. You see some *missing numbers in a 3×3 box. You use each of the numbers, 1–9. In a magic square, the total of numbers in *any row, column, or diagonal is the same. Here, the total is 15. Try this!

A few minutes pass.

Ann: All right, everyone. Have you solved it?

Everyone: Yes.

Bee: (5)-a, I checked what were the missing numbers. They are 5, 8, 9.

(5)-b, I used simple addition.  $x + 3 + 4 = 15$ .  $x + 1 + 6 = 15$ . (5)-c, x is 8.

(5)-d, I found the other two missing numbers.

Dan: Great! I'm sure kids will like it.

Ann: Actually, magic squares are not only for kids. There are a lot of people who love them. You can do this puzzle anywhere with just a piece of paper and a pencil.

Cal: Wow! I don't have to use anything special.

Ann: That's right. I'll show you another interesting puzzle. This is almost the same as the magic square. It's called a “*word square.” The same words are *spelled across and down. Let's try this. You can find all the words in an English dictionary. I'll give you hints.

|   |  |  |  |
|---|--|--|--|
| 1 |  |  |  |
| 2 |  |  |  |
| 3 |  |  |  |
| 4 |  |  |  |

1. not quick      2. parents' (      ) for their children

3. almost the same meaning as “above”      4. (      ) you busy yesterday?

Dan: I got it! <sup>(6)</sup>The answers are like this, right?

Ann: You did it.

Cal: I'm getting more interested in puzzles. Kids can even learn words by studying math.

Ann: Now, I'd like to talk about one person. I guess all of you know the story **"Alice's Adventures in Wonderland."*

Bee: I read it, and I also saw the movie. I really enjoyed it.

Dan: I thought the book was very funny.

Ann: Then, do you know who wrote that story?

Cal: *Lewis Carroll?

Ann: Yes, and he was a very famous \*mathematician. He liked to play with words. For example, he found a way to remember  $\pi = 3.1415926$ . The number of letters in each word of "May I have a large \*container of coffee?" \*matches the numbers in  $\pi$ , so Carroll liked to say this expression many times.

Bee: This is my first time to hear that.

Ann: Here, I'd like to show *the doublet, one of his excellent puzzles, to you. You are given a start word and an end word. You must *gradually change the start word into the end word by changing only one letter *at a time, and you have to get a new word with each letter change. Every word must be a real word.

Cal: A word game. I like that.

Ann: I'll give you an example. Take your "cat" to "bed." The answer is like this.

CAT → BAT → BET → BED

Dan: He is really a *genius!

Ann: OK, everyone. Try one of the doublets Lewis Carroll made. Change TEARS into SMILE. You cannot use a person's name. You cannot use a place name.

TEARS → SEARS → (7) → _ _ _ R _ → STALE → STILE → SMILE
(6 changes)

Cal: I solved it. This puzzle is quite surprising.

Dan: The doublet is very good for learning how to think clearly and checking what words you know.

Ann: I'll show you another example. In this doublet, Carroll needed six changes to make FOUR to FIVE. However, in math you just add one to change four to five, like this. Each letter shows a different number.

|       |   |   |   |   |
|-------|---|---|---|---|
|       | F | O | U | R |
| +     |   | O | N | E |
| <hr/> |   |   |   |   |
|       | F | I | V | E |

You can show this addition is correct by using numbers. This is one of the answers.

|       |   |   |   |   |
|-------|---|---|---|---|
|       | 9 | 2 | 3 | 0 |
| +     |   | 2 | 5 | 1 |
| <hr/> |   |   |   |   |
|       | 9 | 4 | 8 | 1 |

〔問 1〕 (1) That makes me so nervous. とあるが、このとき Dan が考えている内容として最も適切なものは次の中ではどれか。

ア My summer math report is so difficult that I'd like to ask my cousins and aunt to help me.

イ I'm really worried about my math homework because I don't think I'll be able to finish it before summer vacation ends.

次の文章を読んで、あとの各問に答えなさい。

(*印のついている単語・語句には、本文のあとに〔注〕がある。)

I grew up in a family of six. When I was young, my parents worked very hard from morning to night. So, my big sister took care of my little sisters and me. She did everything she could do for us. However, when I was twelve, she got married and left home. We were *at a loss. My little sisters and I could not cook at all, so my mother had to cook dinner after the long hard day's work. I knew it was quite hard for her. One evening, I decided to cook for the first time in my life to help her. Before my parents came home, I started cooking by myself. I put some miso and tofu into hot water. I also *fried rice, vegetables and eggs. The fried rice and the miso soup did not taste good, but my parents and sisters said, "You are a good cook, Eiji!" and ate them all with a big smile. <sup>(1)</sup>I felt very proud. I wanted to see their happy smiles again and became interested in cooking.

When I was in high school, I experienced several *part-time jobs. Working as a student was very hard, but I enjoyed meeting and talking with various people. I learned people have different *values. I had various wonderful experiences at different jobs. One of them was carrying heavy boxes of food into the kitchens of restaurants. One day, I carried lots of fresh vegetables to a popular French restaurant. The cooks were preparing and *dishing up food in a very careful way. I asked them, "Do you really need to do this? Does it really taste different?" The *chef said, "Yes, it does. When we think about the customers and make every effort for them, they understand us and give us happy smiles. <sup>(2)</sup>If we don't, the meal will taste different, and our customers will soon realize the difference." I looked at their customers. They were all enjoying their meals and talking with *staff members with big smiles. That reminded me of my first time cooking. I thought it would be great to see people's smiles every day. Then I decided to be a cook.

After high school, I went to a cooking school for a year, and then went to France to learn more. In France, I met various people and various local foods. Everything I saw looked *sophisticated and beautiful. It was a very exciting experience for me. After coming back to Tokyo, I started to work at a very popular hotel restaurant. I worked quite *efficiently <sup>(3)</sup>thanks to my experiences in my high school days. I was also *skillful. Just in five years, I became the *sous-chef of the restaurant. I was quite sure that I had excellent cooking skills. I worked harder to cook better meals. I wanted the other staff members to work as hard and efficiently as I did. I also wanted the chef to do his best for us. I really believed that I was doing everything right.

However, one day, we made a serious *mistake at a very important party. Actually, it was not my mistake, but one of my *coworkers said to the chef that it was, and the chef believed that. I was very shocked. I decided to leave the hotel restaurant, and started to work at a small restaurant. I tried hard to cook meals as well as I did at the famous hotel restaurant, but it was difficult because we could not pay much money for better food. My coworkers were all nice, but they were not very skillful and looked *lazy. I tried to teach them how to cook well and how to work efficiently, but they did not listen to me. I was at a loss. I often said to my wife, Fumi, “If they follow my advice, our restaurant will soon become very popular. <sup>(4)</sup> I don’t understand why they don’t listen to me.”

One Sunday, I went shopping with Fumi and went into a restaurant for lunch. A staff member brought a *hamburg steak to the man sitting next to us. It was only with carrots, with nothing else. I said quietly to Fumi, “It looks like one for a child, not for an adult. They should do their best to make a more delicious hamburg steak and dish it up in a more sophisticated way.” However, the man looked very happy to see the plate. He started to eat it, and suddenly said, “This is it!” I was surprised, and asked him, “What’s so special about it?” He said, “It may not look so special to you, but it is to me. I came here with my parents forty years ago for my tenth birthday, and I loved their hamburg steak. Today I told about that to a staff member. Guess what happened. This is dished up in *exactly the same way, and tastes exactly the same! I hear they usually make it in a more sophisticated way, but <sup>(5)</sup> this is exactly the one I want today.” I looked around. It was an old but well cleaned restaurant. All the customers looked happy with their meals. There were only three staff members, but all of them were working efficiently. Everybody was smiling. I *regretted my words to Fumi.

After lunch, I had a chance to talk with the chef. He said, “<sup>(6)</sup> One man’s treasure may be another man’s waste. We just always think about other people’s feelings.” His words reminded me of my school days and my stay in France. At that time I had a great time talking with various people and learning various values. However, after I began working, I started pushing my opinion on people around me. Now I know I could not work well with my coworkers at both restaurants because of this reason.

The next morning, I talked with the other staff members about my plans for a better restaurant, and asked them to tell me theirs. <sup>(7)</sup> I 【 ① had ② almost ③ to find ④ was surprised ⑤ their own plans ⑥ them ⑦ all of ⑧ that 】. They just had ideas that were different from mine. I believed that they were lazy, but I was wrong. They just did not have enough skills to realize those ideas. From that day, we have a meeting twice a week to *exchange our opinions. I also began to watch and listen to my coworkers and customers to guess what they want. Now more people smile at me, and I have a busier but happier life. Someday I want to have my own restaurant that is full of smiles.
